Market Review and Outlook

Review for Dec 2016: Buoyed by the improved sentiments on oil prices following the oil production cut deal amongst OPEC & non-OPEC members, markets across GCC rallied during the last month of the year 2016. The S&P GCC Composite Index closed the year with a gain of 4.2%, with the largest gainer amongst GCC Indices being Dubai financial market at 12.1%. Even though, the trading volumes improved during Dec'2016, the value of shares traded in GCC remained at a 5-year low of $388bn, with Saudi accounting for almost 80% of the value.

Outlook for Jan 2017: Given the strong linkage to oil prices, the markets could continue to improve in 2017, given the oil prices are likely to average higher than in 2016. However, given the huge run-up in Saudi and with its valuations now in line with its peers, we could see some profit taking. Other markets could continue to see momentum on back of improved sentiments amongst investors as projects could continue and payments issues could be resolved. However, fiscal consolidation could continue in markets whose fiscal deficit has remained at an abnormally high levels of their GDP and this could likely bring muted earnings for these markets in 2017. We would continue to be remain stock and sector specific and carry on improving our risk adjusted return for the fund.
